THE STORY

Joy can find us at the edge of an evening we never expected to remember. Someone reaches for us, we answer, and suddenly the hours feel generous. There is a particular freedom in sharing happiness before we know what to call it, while one more moment together still seems easy to ask for. Who says a night has to belong to you before it can become part of your story?

One More Song

VERSE 1

Someone's cousin's getting married.
Neither one of us knows why we're here.
You spilled the champagne on my jacket.
I said don't worry, it's not dear.

PRE-CHORUS

The band played something slow and older.
Nobody else got up to dance.
You held your hand out like you meant it.
I took the chance.

CHORUS

One more song before we go.
One more song, then let them know.
We crashed a wedding, made it ours.
One more song, we've still got hours.

VERSE 2

The bride caught us still dancing later.
She laughed and asked how long we'd known.
You said since roughly half past seven.
I said longer, felt like I'd have known.

PRE-CHORUS

They cleared the floor for one last number.
Everybody found their coats to leave.
You pulled me back before I'd taken
I didn't need to be relieved.
I didn't need to be relieved.

CHORUS

One more song before we go.
One more song, then let them know.
We crashed a wedding, made it ours.
One more song, we've still got hours.

OUTRO

Whose wedding was it?
Doesn't matter now.
